Moonlighting cops rake it in

Our boys in green.
Paid-duty assignments skyrocket from 40,919 to 51,526 in four years

Three years after council passed measures designed to rein in spending on the cops-for-hire program, the number of lucrative moonlighting assignments has soared.

Last year, 3,047 off-duty Toronto officers earned $26.1 million for performing 51,526 jobs ranging from guarding work sites to providing crowd control at Raptors games.

In 2009, Toronto police assigned 3,700 officers to 40,919 paid duty requests, for which they received $24.2 million.

"The numbers aren't lying: it's tending and trending upwards," said Coun. Michael Thompson, vice-chair of the Toronto Police Services Board.

"We don't blame the officers; the mechanism allows them to do it," he said. "We're trying to put a lid on it."

In 2011, city Auditor General Jeffrey Griffiths released a report recommending sweeping changes, many of which city council adopted.

The city also revised all city permits and construction contracts to remove, "where possible, the requirement for paid duty police officers."

So why does paid-duty continue to grow?

Toronto police spokesman Mark Pugash said he had no answer, as the service is simply responding to requests.

Nor could he say if the increase in demand relates to the city's recent construction boom. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Compensation

For paid-duty service, police charge a minimum of $65 an hour per officer, for no less than a three-hour shift.

- For that, an officer can do as little as stand around a construction site, a dingy downtown beer store or keep watch over the Santa Claus Parade.

Board decision reversed

Electronic dance music back at Exhibition Place

The dance party will continue at Exhibition Place after council reversed a board decision to ban any future electronic music concerts at the city-owned venue. Councillors voted 31 to 4 to restore Exhibition Place's ability to hold large-scale, one-off concerts in spaces like the Better Living Centre after the board of directors for Exhibition Place banned them in April, citing safety concerns.

"I think folks have realized it was a rash decision on the part of the (Exhibition) Place board, not grounded in fact," said Coun. Mike Layton, who sits on the board and brought the motion to council. Those who voted against the original board item argued Zlatko Starkovski, the owner of Muzik nightclub who leases space within Exhibition grounds, was trying to stifle competition.

'Racist' but not illegal

Anti-immigration flyers. Police won't lay charges against group that distributed leaflets deemed 'hateful' by Premier Wynne

Quoted

"They are targeting the Sikh community at this time, but they will now be targeting other groups.... This is a hate crime." Brampton Sikh activist Gurmeet Singh

An anti-immigration flyer that sparked outrage for singling out the Sikh community when it was distributed in Brampton last month is "racist and offensive" but does not warrant hate crimes charges, Peel Regional Police say.

"We understand the deep hurt and harm incidents such as this cause our community," police said in a statement released Thursday in announcing no charges would be laid. After an investigation and consultations with the Peel Crown Attorney's Office, police said the contents of the flyer did not meet the legal threshold for hate crime charges.

The flyer is entitled "The Changing Face of Brampton" and shows a photograph of an all-white group with the caption "From this" above a photo of a group of Sikhs, with the caption "To this."

Brampton Sikh activist Gurmeet Singh said Immigration Watch, the group behind the flyer, had committed a hate crime and said other immigrants would now come under their crosshairs.

"In my opinion, they should have been prohibited to use this flyer," he said. "They are targeting the Sikh community at this time, but they will now be targeting other groups. They can be targeting anyone coming from anywhere. This is a hate crime."

For its part, Immigration Watch said it was surprised an investigation even took place.

"I never expected any charges to be laid in the first place. I thought they were so ridiculous from the beginning and meant to shut people up," Dan Murray, a spokesperson and co-founder of the group, told Torstar News Service. "If anything should be going on, the real uproar should be over unnecessary immigration … displacing thousands of Canadians from their jobs."

The flyer drew criticism from a range of groups, including Ontario Premier Kathleen Wynne, who called the leaflet "hateful" when it was first handed out to Brampton residents. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Tory selling himself as city's 'salesperson'

In campaign mode. Mayoral candidate says his business experience and network of contacts will create opportunities for jobs in Toronto

Mayoral candidate John Tory wants to bring jobs to the people and move people to the jobs. That includes pushing for a new medical school at York University that would connect students with the modernized Humber River Regional Hospital to create new opportunities for students in a technology-smart city, Tory said at his first major economic policy announcement at the Economic Club of Canada on Thursday.

But Tory's proposals — and plans for "first-class" transit which formed a key pillar in his new "One Toronto" plan — still come without specifics on how they will be achieved or funded.

Bad blood

Olivia Chow also said she took offence to John Tory saying chasing new business was in his "blood."

- "Representing our city is earned, not inherited," Chow said.

That transit plan, including funding, was promised later this month.

"I've named the time when I'm going to do it," Tory told reporters after his lunch-hour speech, adding he'd made several announcements already on transit priorities, trees and a code of conduct.

Tory, who is positioning himself as the "salesperson" the city needs in its mayor, maintained his support for a Scarborough subway and a downtown relief line, in that order. He would not directly speak to his position on other transit projects already planned by Metrolinx, such as the Finch West and Sheppard East light rail.

He called the Scarborough subway — his first transit priority — a "magnet" for jobs and said it must be built "right away."

Tory also spoke about youth unemployment in Toronto, which he said ranks worse that all other economic regions in Ontario, at 20 per cent.

"I can and I will use my business experience and my network of people that I've had the privilege to get to know … to get more employers on board and to create more opportunities for young people," Tory said in his speech.

Those comments drew criticism online and from opposing candidates.

"He's just going to make some phone calls and it's going to happen? What does he mean?" Olivia Chow said in an interview with Torstar on Thursday. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Flood. Bolts go missing, Ferrari left dripping

A new city report says missing fasteners on a maintenance cover led to last summer's dramatic flooding of the Lower Simcoe Street underpass that destroyed a lawyer's Ferrari.

Crews discovered after the flood that the four needed bolts were absent. The underpass would have stayed dry if the cover had been sealed, said Toronto Water general manager Lou Di Gironimo.

Employment lawyer Howard Levitt was forced to abandon his 2010 Ferrari California in the overpass after the car was swamped. Photos of the stranded car became a defining image of the flood. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Horwath. NDP leader touts tax credit to help firms with new hires

NDP Leader Andrea Horwath says only her party can be trusted to create new jobs in Ontario.

She visited a Niagara Falls auto parts plant Thursday morning to tout a tax credit that would compensate employers for bringing on new staff.

This is a goal she says the Liberals and Tories can't be trusted to do.

The $500-million two-year plan would pay 10 per cent of a fresh employee's yearly pay, to a maximum of $5,000 per worker and $100,000 per company.

Horwath says the plan would create 120,000 new "good-paying jobs."

According to Horwath, her party would make sure the cash doesn't go to low-skilled positions or companies that end employment after the year is up.

She says funding for the program would be found by finding efficiencies in a government spending review, but couldn't offer an example of where the money would come from.

The NDP brought up the tax credit proposal earlier this year.

Wynne continues to take swipes at Stephen Harper

One-two punch. Premier's campaign includes a heavy dose of criticism for PM

Decision Ontario

Only Ontario's Liberals can stand up to Prime Minister Stephen Harper, who is ignoring the needs of the people in Canada's most populous province, Premier Kathleen Wynne said Thursday.

Wynne took another swipe at Harper while campaigning for the June 12 election, repeating her long-standing complaint that Ontario puts $11 billion more into federal coffers than it gets back. Speaking at an event organized by the Canada 2020 think-tank, the Liberal leader said that the prime minister's tone-deaf attitude is jeopardizing Ontario's fragile economic recovery.

"This year Ontario is going to receive $641 million less in major transfers from the federal government, and this is at a time when we can least afford the hit," Wynne said.

Her jabs at Harper have become a common occurrence on the first leg of the campaign, but date back to her rallying cry during a March 22 party convention where she called his antipathy towards pension reform "offensive and inexplicable."

Eye for an eye?

Stephen Harper has been silent on Wynne's challenge to match her party's promise of $1 billion to build a transportation route to the mineral-rich Ring of Fire in northern Ontario, she said.

Premier Kathleen Wynne makes an election stop on the edge of the Ottawa River on Thursday. SEAN KILPATRICK/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Her government proposed a mandatory made-in-Ontario pension plan after the federal Tories spurned their advances to enhance the Canada Pension Plan, saying it would be harmful to increase contributions from workers and employers until the economy gathers steam. Harper panned the proposal last week, saying people prefer tax breaks as a reward for saving for retirement, rather than having their taxes hiked.

More apprentices equals more jobs, says Hudak

Ontario Progressive Conservative Leader Tim Hudak took the first step Thursday to reveal how he plans to create one million jobs over eight years, saying he'd start with getting more young people into apprenticeships for the skilled trades.

Allowing more apprentices on work sites so young people can get good-paying jobs as plumbers, welders or electricians and help address a labour shortage in the skilled trades makes good sense, he said.

"They have this old rule that dates back to the 1970s that says for every single apprentice in many trades you have to have four or five journeymen, so they limit the number of opportunities," Hudak told construction workers at a new housing project.

"Allow each journeyman to mentor and train an apprentice, one each, and that'll help create 200,000 positions."

The Tories say changing the apprenticeship ratios is an easy fix to a growing labour shortage in the trades and a good way to start addressing the high unemployment rate among youth.

"Why would you restrict young people from getting good jobs in the trades?" asked Hudak.

"It won't cost you a penny.

"One simple cabinet meeting, one stroke of the pen, and it's done."

Limiting the number of apprentices hurts young people, but benefits entrenched unions that support the Liberals by funding campaign advertising attacking the Tories under the banner of the Working Families Coalition, said Hudak.

"Special interests like the Working Families Coalition want to artificially limit the number of people that get into skilled trades because it increases their bargaining power," he said.

"I get that. I think it's wrong."

Premier Kathleen Wynne said "there's absolutely no evidence" Hudak's plan to change the apprentice ratios would create jobs, and warned he will cost the province jobs by slashing government spending and ending grants to corporations.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

If I'm elected...

A Conservative government would make trades training a community college course and would abolish the College of Trades set up by the Liberals as a self-regulating body, which Hudak said amounts to little more than "a tax grab" to fund a "needless new bureaucracy."

BEING GOOD NEIGHBOURS IS VITAL TO TTC'S WORK

ANDY BYFORD
CEO
TORONTO TRANSIT COMMISSION

This spring and summer, Queen St. E. will see streetcar track and switch upgrades, as well as replacement of utilities, such as a watermain on Leslie St., in addition to construction of a connection track to the Leslie Barns, the TTC's new streetcar maintenance and storage facility.

This work will require intersection closures at Leslie St., Victoria St. and Broadview Ave. – the first two starting this weekend. A video was produced to help explain the work, the timing and the diversions to affected routes. Please go to our YouTube channel (youtube.com/officialTTCchannel) for more. This edition of Toronto Moves provides diversion details, including a map of the affected areas.

Such work inevitably causes disruption for commuters and businesses affected by the closures. I am determined that we go the extra mile to mitigate these.

To address the concerns of local businesses, we have conducted an extensive communications campaign that includes the delivery of 35,000 leaflets to residents and businesses along Queen St. and into the neighbouring community outlining travel options while the work progresses. We are also reminding residents that businesses remain open and to please continue to patronize shops and restaurants.

A community office was also established in Leslieville and, just last week, I attended a community meeting to answer questions from local businesses and to make sure we are doing all we can to be good neighbours.

Ultimately, this work will mean more reliable streetcar service as infrastructure is renewed and speed restrictions removed. The new connection track to Leslie Barns also brings the roll-out of our new, low-floor streetcar fleet a step closer to reality.

I would like to thank riders, residents and businesses for their patience while we complete this essential work over the next several months.

TTC STREETCAR TRACK WORK ON QUEEN ST. E.

The TTC is installing and replacing streetcar track and upgrading utilities and infrastructure at three intersections along Queen St. E. this spring and summer, requiring intersection closures at Leslie St., Victoria St. and Broadview Ave.

May 11 – May 31:
TTC crews will close Victoria and Queen to replace tracks and switches. At the same time, crews will close Leslie and Queen to replace a watermain and install new streetcar tracks that will connect with Leslie Barns, the new storage and maintenance facility being built to house Toronto's new, low-floor streetcars.

Service impact:
- 301/501 Queen streetcars diverting both ways via Queen, Coxwell, Gerrard, Broadview, Queen, Church, King, servicing King and St Andrew stations, Spadina to route.
- 501 Queen replacement bus operating between Woodbine Loop and University Ave diverting via Greenwood, Dundas, Jones.
- 301 Queen all-night replacement bus operating between Neville Park Loop and University Ave. diverting via Greenwood, Dundas, Jones.
- There will be no service on Queen Street between Greenwood and Jones, or between Church and Spadina.
- The 502 Downtowner and 503 Kingston Rd streetcar routes will be replaced by buses diverting in both directions via Greenwood, Dundas and Jones.

The TTC will be increasing service to the 31 Greenwood, 83 Jones, 72 Pape and 143 Downtown/Beach Express buses for customers wishing to use an alternate route. For more information, visit ttc.ca.

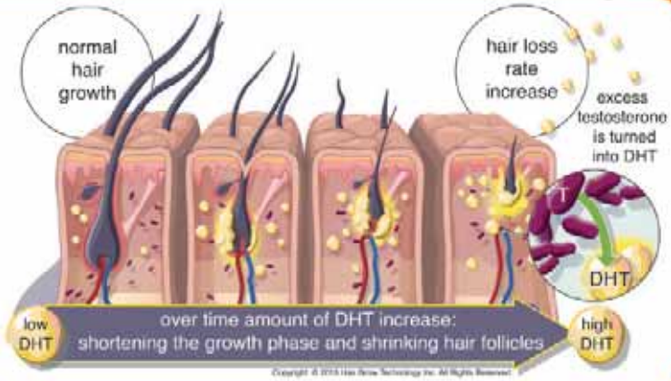
STOP HAIR LOSS

#1 SELLING IN CANADA

for MEN and for WOMEN

What Causes Hair Loss?

Hair loss is caused by multiple factors; health, medication, diet, stress, illness and hereditary genetics. One major reason is hereditary genetics which determine our potential hair loss condition. Some people see hair loss in their 20's, while others see little hair loss over their lifetime. An enzyme called 5-alpha reductase converts testosterone into dihydrotestosterone (DHT), which inhibits hair production and degrade the follicles over time. This condition is known as androgenic alopecia (AGA), also called male and female pattern baldness. As DHT attack the hair follicles it will lead to thinner and more fragile hair as you age.



normal hair growth
hair loss rate increase excess testosterone is turned into DHT
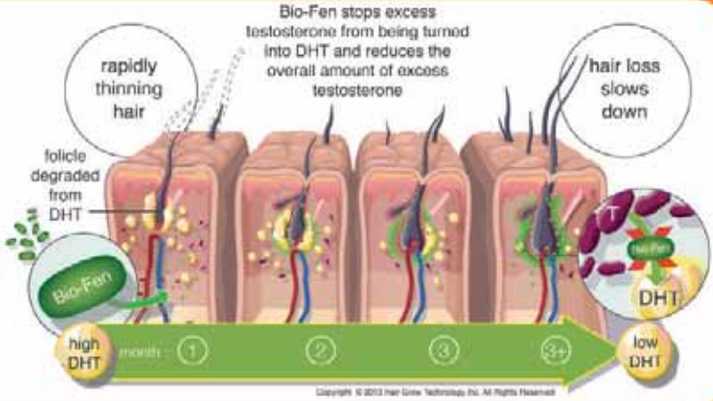
DHT
low DHT
over time amount of DHT increase:
shortening the growth phase and shrinking hair follicles
high DHT

How does Bio-Fen® PLUS work?

The fenugreek seed extract in both formulas reduces excess blood lipid levels. Fenugreek contains an active plant sterol, which has been shown to inhibit 5-alpha-reductase activity – the enzyme responsible for converting excess testosterone to DHT (which is the primary molecule that causes hair loss). The SDG from flax lignans in both formulas also decreases excess cholesterol - the building block of testosterone. Based on new research on the rate of metabolism of SDG in flax lignans (8-12 hours on average).



How long must I use Bio-Fen® Plus?

Bio-Fen® Plus for Men capsules are usually effective at stopping hair loss within the first two months. However, since healthy hair grows only about 1 cm each month, it may take up to three months before you notice that hair growth is increased or the rate of hair loss is decreased. Anyone experiencing new growth should see it within four months. Once you stop completely your hair growth pattern will slowly go back to the point where you started.

See our website to locate your nearest store that carries Bio-Fen® Plus.

Rob in rehab? Coffee chain 'confirmed' Doug Ford was at restaurant on Tuesday, but refuses to release images

Tim Hortons has "confirmed" it was Doug Ford — not the mayor — who visited a franchise location in the Junction on Tuesday morning, a spokesperson said on Thursday.

Michelle Robichaud, manager of public relations for the coffee chain, said employees at the west-end Tim Hortons reviewed video from security cameras and concluded it was Coun. Ford who attended the restaurant while Mayor Rob Ford was purportedly in rehab.

Tim Hortons is refusing to release images from its cameras to prove Rob Ford wasn't there.

"It is, for sure, Doug," said Robichaud. "That's all I want to say right now — that it was reviewed internally and we can confirm it's Doug."

Rob Ford announced he was going to rehab last week to deal with an "alcohol problem," and has reportedly made calls to a Toronto Sun columnist from a treatment facility.

Sixteen-year-old Cayla Clarkson, however, claims she saw the mayor outside the Tim Hortons near Dundas St. W. and Clendenan Ave. Tuesday around 9 a.m.

A Tim Hortons employee who would not share her name also told the Star the mayor came into the restaurant that morning and ordered coffee and a sandwich.

In the days since the mayor took a leave of absence and said he is going to rehab, there have been several claimed Ford sightings in disparate locations, including Hamilton, Richmond Hill and the Homewood Health Centre in Guelph.

Speaking to reporters Thursday, Doug Ford said his brother is "nowhere near the GTA." His exact location has not been disclosed.

'People tried to stop it.' Woman killed by bear at oilsands site wasn't alone

A union official says a woman killed by a bear at one of Canada's major oilsands sites was with several workers who tried to scare the animal away.

The 36-year-old Suncor employee was an instrument technician, who was doing electrical work at a job site near Fort McMurray, Alta., when the bear attacked her Wednesday.

"It was ... seven people that were working in a group area and she was attacked by this bear out of that group and dragged off," Scott Doherty, a spokesman for Unifor, told The Canadian Press.

"People tried to stop it and do everything they could. Obviously they are fairly horrified at what they saw and witnessed."

Doherty said the union does not believe the workers were carrying bear spray. He said they remained in the area until police and wildlife officers arrived.

Another union official said the woman's co-workers blasted air horns to scare the bear away, but to no effect.

Nielle Hawkwood began noticing that her hair was falling out about four years ago. She also began experiencing skin irritation — as did her husband, Howard — as well as nosebleeds.

Two years ago, she was diagnosed with alopecia, which causes significant hair loss.

"The dermatologist said something has affected my immune system," said Nielle, during a visit in April to the couple's 456-hectare cattle ranch nestled amongst the rolling brown hills north of Calgary. They have been there for 34 years and it's been in Howard's family since 1972.

Both Nielle and Howard believe their recent health problems are the result of an increase in fracking wells being drilled in the area — 110 in the past four years and another 39 projected for this year. The closest is four kilometres from their ranch.

They assert that the hair loss, skin irritation and nosebleeds did not exist before the rise of fracking in the area.

For its part, Lochend Industry Producers Group (LIPG), which consists of four different oil and gas companies active in the area, says there has been no water contamination and that the risk of water or air contamination to people living within 10 kilometres from a fracking well is "exceedingly" small.

The companies set surface casings — a concrete and steel barrier that line the well to prevent fracking fluid from entering the ground water — to 600 metres, double the required regulatory depths in the Lochend area.

As well, the group says, the productive fracking zone is approximately 2,200 metres below the ground, far below a typical water well that sits at around 45 metres deep.

But the health issues raised by the Hawkwoods could prove a cautionary tale for residents and industry in Northeast B.C., where a massive expansion of shale gas fracking is underway.

"I think those are fair and legitimate questions that the public are asking," said Geoff Morrison, the manager of B.C. operations for the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, about health and environmental concerns.

"We're trying to do an improved job of reassuring the public about our practices so they can come to reasonable conclusions about safety.

"Social licences have two components: One is doing the right thing and being regulated in the proper way, and the other is communications. For us, in B.C. … we've been well-regulated and are doing the right thing."

A recent study by the Council of Canadian Academies found human health and well-being may be affected by the various environmental effects resulting from shale gas development.

"Health impacts are not well understood and additional research is required," the report concluded.

Metro requested an interview with Alberta's Ministry of Health about any health complaints near the Hawkwoods' ranch and related to fracking, but a spokesperson was not made available.

The Hawkwoods, however, aren't only worried about their own health.

Last spring and summer, the Hawkwoods say 18 of their cows died, while seven others appeared thin and unhealthy, and did not calve.

A necropsy of one female bovine conducted last April — the document of the testing was viewed by two Metro reporters — noted the cause of death was undetermined, but the Hawkwoods believe water contamination was the cause and fracking the culprit.

The sudden deaths of some of the Hawkwood's cows not only has a financial impact — each cow is worth about $1,800 — but also to the reputation of his ranch.

LIPG points out that it receives very few concerns and most of those are focused on increased traffic, dust and noise associated with increased activity. They say member companies take complaints very seriously and the majority of concerns are answered to the complainant's satisfaction.

"There has been a very small group of residents who individually and collectively have expressed their opposition to resource development and we continue to work with them to address their concerns," said LIPG in an email.

However, with their growing concern over health and environmental effects, the Hawkwoods have contemplated moving away from their ranch, which has been in their family for five decades.

"I'm a little bit upset about it. So where do I go? I love living in the area."

Call for a moratorium

The Hawkwoods are among a group of Alberta residents who have issued an open letter to Premier Dave Hancock demanding a moratorium on horizontal fracking, similar to bans in place in Quebec, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and Labrador.

Pits of dead moose and loss of wildlife habitat

A pit, one of many along the Alaska Highway, contains the carcass of a moose. MATT KIELTYKA/METRO IN VANCOUVER

If you pull over on northeastern B.C.'s Alaska Highway and drive a few hundred metres into the bush, you'll smell it first. Then you'll see flies buzzing over a deep pit. It is filled with decomposing moose carcasses.

These pits dot the highway, said Carl Gitscheff of the B.C. Wildlife Federation — the final resting places of the large animals killed by the high traffic of trucks and transport trailers required by the gas industry. He estimates that more than a dozen moose are killed daily.

While Gitscheff, a trapper and hunter in the region, hasn't noticed any mutations or internal health problems in the animals, the gas industry's massive footprint has carved out crucial pieces of wildlife habitat.

They're competing for land because good oil and gas country, he says, is also good wildlife country.

"When you have a geological formation that makes coal and oil and gas, for whatever reason it's also good for wildlife."

Pipeline right of ways can destroy wildlife connections between land and water, he said. He added that one solution would be boring underground to build instead of digging the surface.

Exploration activity can destroy trees and scare away female animals who nest in them, leaving young marten and fisher to die.

"Companies should be obligated to mitigate this. Who's going to push that? The public." EMILY JACKSON/METRO IN VANCOUVER

Future of fracking

'We can do better'

There's a prevailing sense in the north that no matter what, companies will frack the land to get to the gas.

Regardless of where people fall on the spectrum between welcoming economic growth and wanting to stop fracking for fear of side effects on health and the land, they all seem to believe one thing: If development is going to happen, it can be done better.

Cracks in foundation

Report on safety. B.C. unmoved as rest of the country remains fractured on fracking

MATT KIELTYKA
Metro in Vancouver

There are mounting calls for British Columbia to join other provinces and ease its foot off the liquefied natural gas (LNG) pedal to better study the health and environmental impacts of fracking.

The Council of Canadian Academies (CCA) last week released a report concluding that there isn't enough scientific study about the impacts of fracking to declare it safe.

The independent report specifically cited concerns about well integrity, emissions and the possibility of water contamination.

Quebec, Nova Scotia, and Newfoundland and Labrador have all had similar concerns and placed moratoriums on the practice.

But the B.C. government has refused to do the same.

"I don't agree with [the CCA]," Rich Coleman, the minister responsible for LNG, told media. "[The report] does not give me any cause for concern because I know we already study this on a regular basis. We track it on a regular basis and we know what our stats are. I think we have it pretty much right."

Lack of confidence

Not everyone shares the government's confidence.

The proposed TransCanada North Montney Mainline project in northeast B.C. would see a 301-kilometre pipeline carry natural gas through Halfway River First Nation territory.

"The elders look out their back window and that line will be right there," said Halfway River Chief Darlene Hunter. "It's just like me coming into your backyard and ripping up your place and being OK with that."

Striking a balance between economic development and health concerns has been a challenge for many First Nations, according to Prophet River Chief Lynette Tsakoza.

"Right now it's a big concern," Tsakoza said. "Every nation wants economic development, and at the same time we're trying to fight for our territory, our environment and our water. Everything."

Fears around fracking

Dr. Warren Bell, a family physician in Salmon Arm, B.C. and founding member of the Canadian Association of Physicians for the Environment, believes the fears around fracking are justified.

"There's abundant evidence in the Eastern States where fracking has been going on for some time. You've heard of a burning drinking water scenario, and that's because chemicals have come up far, far away from the well site simply because in this process of fracturing, you allow gases to escape. Methane plus the chemicals used in fracking, some of which are carcinogens, are starting to appear in places they shouldn't be."

The province has commissioned its own human health assessment into oil and gas development in northeast B.C., which is currently underway by a company called Intrinsik Environmental Services.

The findings are expected to be handed over to the Ministry of Health sometime this summer.

Fort St. John Mayor Lori Ackerman, who wants to see increased air monitoring in her city, said the community welcomes the study.

"If there are issues, then necessity is the mother of all invention and let's take a look at how we can correct that," Ackerman said. "If we don't have baseline [air quality] information, then this is a way to get it, through this study."

Critics, however, are concerned the findings may fall on deaf ears.

The NDP Opposition has accused the provincial government of undermining the environment with regulation changes that allow for gas development on protected agricultural and park lands.

The Liberals also attempted to scrap the environmental assessment process for sweet natural gas plants in April.

But those plans were reversed within hours after government and industry reps were ejected from an LNG conference hosted by shocked and angry First Nations leaders in Fort Nelson.

Forced to apologize

Environment Minister Mary Polak was forced to apologize for "failing to discuss the amendment with First Nations prior to its approval."

West Coast Environmental Law Association lawyer Anna Johnston warned the steps amount to "a slide towards environmental deregulation."

That hasn't stopped the government from trying to reassure the public that fracking — so integral to B.C.'s economic outlook — is safe.

"We in British Columbia do fracking better than anybody else in the world," Premier Christy Clark told Metro after announcing an LNG trade mission to Asia on April 30. "We learn from what we do here because, in 50 years of fracking, there hasn't been a single reported case of water contamination in British Columbia. That's a pretty good record."

Military was warned ahead of deadly Boko Haram attack: Locals

Villagers criticize failure of security forces

South Africans protest against the abduction three weeks ago of hundreds of schoolgirls in Nigeria by Muslim extremist group Boko Haram and what protesters said was the failure of the Nigerian government to rescue them, during a march to the Nigerian Consulate in Johannesburg, South Africa, Thursday. BEN CURTIS/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Residents of a Nigerian town attacked by Boko Haram criticized security forces for failing to protect them despite warnings that the Islamic militants were nearby. At least 50 bodies have been recovered, many horribly burned, in the town.

The attack on Gamboru, in remote northeastern Nigeria near the border with Cameroon, is part of the Islamic militants' campaign of terror that included the kidnapping of teenaged girls from a school, 276 of whom remain missing and believed held by Boko Haram.

The death toll from the Monday afternoon attack in Gamboru was initially reported by a senator to be as many as 300, but a security official said it is more likely to be around 100. Some Gamboru residents said bodies were recovered from the debris of burned shops around the town's main market, which was the focus of the attack.

The bodies were found after the market reopened on Wednesday as health workers, volunteers and traders searched for missing people, said Gamboru resident Abuwar Masta.

Masta and other traders said that some villagers had warned the security forces of an impending attack after insurgents were seen camping in the bush near Gamboru.

Missing girls

Equipment deal still in the works

Canada and Nigeria are still negotiating whether the African country will be getting Canadian military surveillance equipment to help in its search for nearly 300 kidnapped teenage girls.

The Harper government has offered to provide surveillance equipment, plus the military personnel to operate it, in an effort to help find the hundreds of teenaged girls abducted by the Boko Haram Islamic militant group last month.

Hackers accused of targeting T.O. police computers

Cyber attack. Toronto Police database stored sensitive info on 220,000 service members, including social security numbers and birthdates

A former U.S. Navy nuclear systems administrator has been charged with trying to break into the Toronto Police Service computer system.

There was no immediate word on Thursday on whether Nicholas Knight, 27 of Virginia, had any success in his online attack, as part of a hacking group called "Team Digi7al."

Knight worked on an aircraft carrier in the nuclear reactor department.

Also charged was Illinois community college student Daniel Krueger, who studied network administration.

The men also tried to hack into the computers of more than 30 other organizations, including the U.S. Navy, the U.S. National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency, the U.S. Department of Homeland Security, Los Alamos National Laboratory and the World Health Organization, according to a statement issued this week from the U.S. Attorney's office for the Northern District of Oklahoma.

The Toronto Police Service and UBC were the only Canadian targets.

Knight and Krueger have each been charged with conspiring to steal identities, obstruct justice and damage a protected computer.

The scheme was detected in June 2012 by the Naval Criminal Investigative Service, when it was alerted that someone had breached the Navy's database, according to the Northern District of Oklahoma's Attorney's Office. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Expert testifies at murder trial

Oscar Pistorius is seated in court on Tuesday. MIKE HUTCHINGS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

A ballistics expert called Thursday to testify by Oscar Pistorius's defence offered a different explanation to prosecutors for one of the wounds sustained by Reeva Steenkamp when she was shot and killed by the world-famous athlete last year.

Wollie Wolmarans testified his reconstructions of the Feb. 14, 2013 shooting showed that the pattern of wood splinter marks around a gunshot wound on Steenkamp's right arm indicated that the arm was between six and 20 centimetres from a wood toilet door when it was hit by one of four hollow point bullets fired through the door by Pistorius.

Wolmarans' opinion was being used by the defence to show that Steenkamp may have been reaching out with her arm to open the cubicle door when she was hit. That assertion is in contrast to prosecutors' claims that the model was hiding in fear of an angry Pistorius during a heated nighttime argument. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Prison battles ruling on sex change for convict

Massachusetts prison officials on Thursday made another push to overturn a court ruling that would force them to provide a taxpayer-funded sex-change operation to a murder convict with gender-identity disorder.

The inmate has been given a substantial amount of care, including female hormones, laser hair removal and psychotherapy, and doesn't need the surgery, the Department of Corrections attorney Richard McFarland told the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston.

"The clinician didn't say you must have this surgery, but that if you want it, you can get it," McFarland said Thursday. Only five per cent of people diagnosed with the disorder actually undergo sex-assignment surgery, he added.

Michelle Kosilek, born Robert Kosilek, has been in a heated legal battle to get the surgery, which she says is required to relieve the emotional stress caused by the disorder. Kosilek is currently serving a life sentence for killing spouse Cheryl Kosilek in 1990.

In 2012, a federal judge ruled that the department must give Kosilek the surgery.

In January, that decision was reaffirmed by a three-judge panel of the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which said it is a constitutional right to receive medically necessary treatment "even if that treatment strikes some as odd or unorthodox."

The prisons department appealed and won a rehearing before the full appeals court. It could take months to issue a decision.

If it loses its appeals, Massachusetts would be the first state to fund sex-reassignment surgery for an inmate.

'Hate' in the classroom. School board denounces Holocaust assignment

The school board of a Southern California district where students were told to write an essay on whether they believe the Holocaust really happened said at a packed public meeting Wednesday night that it was a "horribly inappropriate" assignment for which the board takes "full responsibility."

Rialto Unified School Board president Joanne Gilbert read the remarks after a closed session that followed a heated public meeting where Jewish groups, tolerance organizations and community leaders denounced the assignment.

The initial assignment given to eighth-graders was to do some research and write an essay explaining whether they believed the Holocaust was a real historical event or a political scheme to influence public emotion and gain. It was developed in December by a group of language arts teachers planning a unit on The Diary of Anne Frank.

Quoted

"I don't understand why a fact of history would be a matter for debate."
Rabbi Suzanne Singer
Temple Beth El in Riverside, Calif.

The district had already withdrawn the assignment and called it an error.

But the school board went much further in its denunciation Wednesday night, and promised broader action to prevent similar incidents, including sensitivity training for eighth-graders at the Museum of Tolerance in Los Angeles.

State Senator Norma Torres, who represents the area and was one of several political officials in attendance, urged the board to make a strong statement.

"Hate has no place in Rialto," Torres said. "Hate has no place in our classrooms."

Pro-Russian rebels vow referendum will go ahead

Eastern Ukraine. Insurgents defy call by Putin to put off Sunday's vote on secession of region

In an obscure government office guarded by a man in a red T-shirt armed only with a stick, two photocopy machines churned out ballots Thursday for eastern Ukraine's referendum on secession.

In apparent defiance of a call by Russian President Vladimir Putin to put off the vote, insurgents in eastern Ukraine insisted Thursday they will go ahead with this Sunday's referendum.

"Putin is seeking a way out of the situation. We are grateful to him for this," said Denis Pushilin, co-chairman of the Donetsk People's Republic, as the pro-Russian rebels call themselves.

Denis Pushilin, centre, of the elections commission of the so-called Donetsk People's Republic, speaks Thursday. MANU BRABO/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"But we are just a bullhorn for the people," he declared. "We just voice what the people want."

Ukraine has in recent weeks grown perilously polarized, with the west looking toward Europe and the east favouring closer ties with Russia. Thursday's pronouncement was likely to further inflame tensions between the interim government in Kyiv that took power amid chaos in February, and the armed insurgents, who have seized police stations and government buildings in more than a dozen cities in the east.

Support for the referendum is most pronounced among eastern Ukraine's proudly Russian-speaking working class. Rage against the central government that came to power after months of nationalist-tinged protests is blended with despair at Ukraine's dire economic straits and corruption.

Poll results

A strong majority of Ukrainians want their country to remain unified, a poll released Thursday shows.

- The poll, by the Pew Research Center in Washington, found that 77 per cent of people nationwide want Ukraine to maintain its current borders.
- Even in the largely Russian-speaking east, the figure is 70 per cent.

The end of bookstores?

Whether indie or big box, Canadian stores are fighting for survival

MELISSA DUNNE
melissa.dunne@metronews.ca

The Sarfraz family pulled into a dark, deserted mall parking lot.

As sunrise approached, Aisha Sarfraz, 8, was joined by other girls in a growing line outside the Indigo bookstore at Yorkdale Mall in Toronto. Just after 7 a.m., Sarfraz got to go behind the black velvet curtain. The girls (with mothers, fathers and brothers in tow) rushed past the books and into the new pink-and-white American Girl store within the Indigo.

"It was fun," said the fan.

The morning ended with another line at the register and a $941 receipt.

The price of the dolls, which start at $125, did not deter more than 5,000 people in Toronto and Vancouver from checking out Indigo CEO Heather Reisman's latest business gambit last weekend. While books become a harder sell, Canada's only national bookstore chain is stocking everything from dolls to Poppin office supplies to toasted coconut marshmallows. For fiscal 2013, its consolidated revenues slid 4.4 per cent to $892.5 million. Reisman is set to announce fiscal 2014 results on May 27.

They declined to comment for this story.

"They're obviously working out what they're going to evolve to," said Maureen Atkinson, a retail analyst at J.C. Williams Group. "Not everything they're testing will be a hit."

Back in 1995, U.S. bookstore giants Barnes & Noble and Borders Group planned to open superstores north of the border. Reisman was head of Cott Beverages, and was approached to lead Borders' bid. The plan was quashed, as it did not meet Canada's ownership policies for foreign booksellers. Borders filed for bankruptcy in 2011. Barnes & Noble's bid also failed and it is limping towards its 100th birthday in 2017.

Reisman, now 65, has proven to be remarkably resilient over the years. After the Borders deal crumbled she opened her first Indigo Books, Music & More store in 1997 in Burlington, Ont. By 2001 Indigo and Chapters merged, effectively giving the tastemaker a monopoly on Canada's book market.

Just like in the board game Monopoly (which you can now buy at Indigo) the dice mostly rolled in Reisman's favour. The superstore format was a hit with consumers and by the end of 2009 the savvy businesswoman had 96 superstores and 151 small-format stores, according to Indigo's financial reports.

But the game is changing. By the end of 2013, Indigo was down to 131 small stores. By the end of May it will have closed three superstores in Toronto this year, including the World's Biggest Bookstore. When a 22,000-square-foot Chapters store closed in Toronto in February, the founder pinned the closures partially on soaring rents. But that's only part of the tale.

"If you are in the book business you have to be online because that's where the customers are," said Atkinson.

Reisman has seen the writing on the wall. At least for now, physical paperback books are still the No. 1 choice for readers, making up 58 per cent of sales in 2012, followed by hardcovers at 24 per cent, according to BookNet, a nonprofit that collects data on the industry. But many of those books are now bought online.

Indigo launched chapters.indigo.ca in 2001. In 2002 Amazon.ca, the Canadian version of Amazon.com, came along. Amazon is now the world's largest online retailer, with revenue of $74.5 billion US in 2013.

Selling online cuts overhead costs, but it is cut-throat. The "Heathers Kids Pick" The Day the Crayons Quit is $19 in Indigo stores, but $13.72 in the online store for Plum Rewards users — the same price as on Amazon.ca. Price-matching seems to be working. From Oct. to Dec. 2013, Indigo's online sales surged 19.3 per cent to a record $41.5 million, said a release. And then there's ebooks.

Indigo launched the e-reader Kobo to much fanfare in 2010. By the end of 2011 Kobo Inc. was sold for $315 million US. It's looking like a smart move as a 2013 BookNet study found the appetite has already plateaued at about 15 per cent. A Pew Research Center report shows 32 per cent of ebook readers read them on their phones, while 78 per cent of tablet owners read them on those devices.

But the competition for ebooks remains stiff. The Day the Crayons Quit is $11.99 for the Kobo edition, while Amazon.ca's Kindle version is $8.99.

The young Aisha is a bit old-fashioned. She still buys the real thing in person at Yorkdale's Indigo. Her mother and little brother usually tag along. The store is trying hard to appeal to mothers too, offering everything from Godiva chocolates to a 50-per-cent off sale this week on five books for Mother's Day. But Aisha's mother, Sarah, can't recall ever buying anything for herself.

"I'm not a reader, I'm a movie person," she said.

If Indigo is to make it to its 20-year anniversary and beyond it will have to find a way to get all those moms, dads and brothers who lined up alongside the girls for the American Girl store to buy something too.

Closures

What we lose

When Harry meets Sally again it is in the self-help section of a New York City bookstore.

In the rom-com classic Billy Crystal (Harry) and Meg Ryan (Sally) eventually live happily ever after, after bumping into each other at a Shakespeare & Co. store.

Whether you are looking to pick up a book or a long-lost lover, when we lose bookstores we lose the possibility of running into an old friend, or making a new one, between the book stacks.

The bestselling fantasy writer and bookstore fanatic Guy Gavriel Kay recently lost his favourite local haunt, Book City. He would often pop in to see what would pop up and tickle his fancy.

Aisha Sarfraz, 8, waits in line outside an Indigo shop in Toronto. CONTRIBUTED

Hopping online is just not the same.

If the 1989 flick was set in 2014 perhaps Sally would have popped up on Harry's Twitter feed. Perhaps he would have just scrolled right past her.

"A lot of our culture today narrows us to our own online community of shared tastes and views. A bookstore is wide open and that helps make us wider and more open," writes Kay over email.

"We risk losing that as bookstores close."

Timmies tries to eat Mickey D's lunch

Tim Hortons menu.
The coffee and doughnut chain aims to lure Canadians away from fast-food rivals by serving up more midday options

Tim Hortons chief executive Marc Caira says he wants the chain to be a priority for Canadians at the lunch hour.

The CEO said Thursday that he's determined to make the company the lunchtime leader among quick-food outlets through its growing variety of sandwiches, grilled paninis and other offerings.

"In this low-growth era you need to aggressively go after these segments because there's potential to grow," he said in an interview after the company's shareholders meeting.

Caira said the recent launch of its crispy chicken sandwich is helping the company achieve the goal of presenting itself as an alternative to its biggest competitors, which include McDonald's and Burger King.

At the same time, Caira wants to focus more on nutrition, emphasizing that his company's chicken sandwich contains more protein and less fat than comparable offerings.

"Our responsibility is to make the product as healthy as possible," he said.

The national coffee and doughnut chain needs to move faster to test and launch food items as it faces off against aggressive competitor, Caira added. THE CANADIAN PRESS

LIFE'S JUST BETTER IN THE COLD

THE METRO LIST

Mike Benhaim
metronews.ca

1 Keep on Tweetin'. Twitter stock plummeted to record lows this week when it was revealed that the social media monster fell far short of projected growth. Is it ironic that this was one of the top trending news items on Twitter?

2 Best of 'gluck. Thailand's prime minister, Yingluck Shinawatra, was ousted from office by the Constitutional Court in Bangkok this week. The claim is that of alleged "abuse of power" which is not only controversial, but makes me wonder if we're even still talking about politics.

3 Missing Mayor. I never thought I'd see the day when we'd be looking for Rob Ford, let alone that he would be hard to find.

4 High praise. Pope Francis decided to wing it in his Palm Sunday homily, calling on people to look into their own hearts to see how they're living and then into their phones to snap them some selfies. He then hopped on the pope-mobile, pointed, winked, and said "Keep it real, homies." #OMGCoolestPopeEver

5 Northern bliss. Canada ranked fifth on the Better Life Index based on a survey of what people believe to be the "most important factors for quality of life." Countries ahead of us included Denmark, Sweden and Norway, leading me to believe that the "most important factors" are skiing, bobsledding, and hockey.

6 #VegasBaby. Ben Affleck won so much money on Black Jack that he was banned by the Hard Rock Casino for allegedly counting cards. This, in my opinion, is an impressive skill for which the victor deserves the spoils. Know anyone who's been banned for losing too much? Think about it while I go play basketball against eight-year-olds for money.

7 Sound of music. It's Canadian Music Week in Toronto. Great time to witness amazing burgeoning talent from other parts of the country and beyond. When I hear American divas complain about not making enough money and playing half-empty venues, I always say, "There are starving artists in Canada who would kill to have what you have!" And we laugh. Then I think about it, and it's actually not that funny. #CMW2014

8 Cold truth. Our nation's only current NHL playoff team is Montreal, but many Canucks seem unwilling to support "les Canadiens," and I believe that Lord Stanley would be turning over in his silver-plated grave. The Parti Québécois lost the election. The least we can do is cheer for the Habs because the closest the rest of us will get to a championship is eating a Stanley Cup doughnut at Tim Hortons. #GoHabsGo

9 Shattered (hoop) dreams. The Toronto Raptors, who had come so far, fell just one point short of advancing to the second round on Sunday. On the bright side, the Brooklyn Nets suffered a humiliating defeat at the hands of the Miami Heat. That shouldn't make me feel any better, but somehow it just does.

Yes, I do have a frog in my throat

This is not the first time Angus James saved a frog from peril. "Funnily enough, when I was a kid one of my fondest memories is of saving tree frogs by picking them up off the road and into a bucket. Then I'd release them into the safety of the bush," he said. COURTESY ANGUS JAMES

Q&A

Avoiding croaking in the jaws of death

Meet the perch that literally had a frog in its throat. Angler Angus James was left gobsmacked when he discovered a green tree frog inside the mouth of the fish he caught in northern Queensland, Australia. James tells Metro about the moment when he realized something fishy was going on.

The frog had just survived being eaten and you had just pulled off this amazing catch, so who had the bigger smile? We both had pretty big smiles but I reckon his was bigger after he'd jumped out of the fish's mouth.

It looks like the frog was hitching a jaw-side ride. But what actually happened? The perch must have just eaten the frog like a minute before I caught it. Normally fish like that go for smaller insects but maybe he was stocking up.

When did you realize that you'd caught a 2-for-1? I wasn't sure what it was at first — it looked like a splodge of green. Then as I was removing the lure from the perch's mouth, the frog blinked. That's when I noticed what it was, and I quickly reached for my camera before it leapt over my shoulder.

You must have cat-like reactions to have managed to get your camera out in time. I used to be in the military, so I reckon the training kicked in. I whipped the camera out of my webbing (bag) and took the pic. But it wasn't till later that I realized just how funny the smiling frog looked.

Neighbors opens in theatres this weekend. CONTRIBUTED

Synopsis

Seth Rogen and Rose Byrne star as Mac and Kelly, aging hipsters and parents to newborn Stella. Their quiet suburban life is uprooted when unruly frat boys led by Teddy (Zac Efron) and Pete (Dave Franco) move in next door. "Make sure that if we're too noisy, call me," says Teddy on the eve of a big blowout. "Don't call the cops." When the house party spirals out of control, the couple has to call the police, thereby violating the fragile "circle of trust" between the two households. Trust broken, petty resentments trigger a Hatfield and McCoy's style feud between Teddy and Company and Mac and Kelly.

Neighbors. Frat boy humour is always funny — but Seth Rogen and Rose Byrne bring some maturity to the fold

Richard: Mark, there's an old saying that goes, "You can choose your friends, but you can't choose your family." True enough, but as this movie teaches us, you should add neighbours to the "cannot choose" list. Living next door to the frat boys would be a nightmare in real life, but in reel life, it's a great situation for humour. The movie is not so much a story as it is an idea played out in a series of gags, but it is funny. Raunchy, but funny.

Mark: Also a movie that would have us believe there are no zoning bylaws in this fictitious college town. And Richard, I half agree with you. There are two movies here. One is the story of a young married couple with a baby; the other, the story of a bunch of frat-house goofs. The former is extremely funny: Seth Rogen and Rose Byrne have a comedic chemistry as good as any great vaudeville duo. The frat boys, unfortunately, are mostly indistinguishable and their scenes made me long for Animal House. Why cast the wonderful Christopher Mintz-Plasse and give him so little to do?

RC: I wondered that as well, but let's face it, in the frat house side of things, Efron's abs are the star. And his hair. And toothy grin. No room for the less physical charms of Mintz-Plasse. The real charm here, though, as you say, lies with Rogen and Byrne. They have great chemistry, and are a natural match — like frat boys and bongs. Their story doesn't hinge on the war with the neighbours, however, as much as it does the way they battle against growing up. Their need to be thought of as cool while still being responsible adults, is very funny and adds a nice subtext to what could have been simply a very silly comedy.

MB: And in this way, the movie could be seen as a sequel to Knocked Up. Both films deal with Rogen as a dad and a late bloomer to maturity. Neighbours wouldn't be nearly as successful if the couple were older or stuffier. It hits the right note of them being almost young enough to take part in frat-house shenanigans, but not with the responsibility of a newborn. As a recent first-time dad, I can tell you they got all those jokes right. But, Richard, I still laughed the hardest at some of the physical stuff. The airbag sequence is bound to be a classic.

RC: The airbag gags made me laugh, for sure, but the real treat for me was watching Rose Byrne, in her natural Aussie accent, outcursing and outdoing Rogen with razor-sharp comic timing.

MB: Or check out her seduction scene of two frat kids — one male, one female — which will get an applause break from the audience every time!

Here's to the toughest job out there.
Happy Mother's Day.

She's a teacher. A nurse. A driver. A therapist. A fashion designer. A cook. A referee. And so much more. For all that they do, Workopolis salutes mothers everywhere for their hard work.

Meeting Justin Bieber was superbad, Seth Rogen says

MELINDA TAUB
Metro World News

It's on: Seth Rogen has become one of the first celebrities to call Justin Bieber out on his crap.

The comedian says his Bieber-related distaste goes back to the early days of Bieber fever. Bieber and Rogen were both backstage at a German talk show when word came that the singer had requested to meet the comedian. "I was like, 'Sure, I'll meet him,'" Rogen told Howard Stern.

"So I went outside to meet him and he was acting like I asked to meet HIM! It was very nonchalant, 'Yo man. What's up?' and I was like, 'What the f—, I don't give a f— about (you), I don't want to meet you. Don't act all nonplussed to meet me. I didn't want to meet you. I was totally cool not meeting you ... But I was like, fine, I wouldn't have said anything, I was like, 'He's a bit of a motherf—er.'"

Yesterday, Bieber responded via Twitter, casting the incident in a somewhat different light: "Seth Rogan (sic) sorry I didnt (sic) bow down when I asked 2 meet u was probably a bit shy and didn't want to be over the top but still. love ur movies."

Aww. I might be inclined to believe that he was just shy, if I hadn't heard literally dozens of stories of him acting like a rude little punk.

Cool mom Jada OK with 13-year-old Willow posing on bed with shirtless man

Willow Smith's mom Jada Pinkett-Smith has strong feelings about photos of her 13-year-old daughter in bed with an adult man: She's strongly cool with it. Pictures surfaced earlier this week of Willow Smith in bed with her friend, 20-year-old Moises Arias. It's not as bad as it sounds at first blush: Willow's fully clothed (though Arias is shirtless) and they don't appear to be touching. But we're still talking a kid in bed with a grown man, which was enough to make the Internet uncomfortable.

Willow's mom Jada, though, says the pic is fine. "Here's the deal: There was nothing sexual about that picture or that situation," the actress told TMZ. "You guys are projecting your trash onto it, and you're acting like covert pedophiles, and that's not cool."

Indeed, a look at Arias' website reveals that this pic is nothing special: He's got tons of snapshots of his friends, and also he pretty much never wears a shirt. We're not sure if that makes it better or worse, since his friends are mostly young teens like Willow and her brother Jaden.

There's never a dull moment when you have dinner with an Aussie winemaker. When Neil McGuigan is at your table you can multiply the fun by at least 1,000. I met up with him earlier this week in Halifax at the Agricola Street Brasserie — the city's hottest new resto. The first time we shared a glass, it was on his home turf in New South Wales's beautiful Hunter Valley.

McGuigan's got a lot to be happy about. He makes the best-selling red in Australia and has been named Winemaker of the Year by the U.K.'s prestigious International Wine & Spirit Competition three times.

Here in Canada he's best known for championing the versatility of the white sémillon grape and creating bright, easy-drinking wines that pour well above their price point.

The 2012 McGuigan Black Label Shiraz ($10.99) is a mini fruit bomb with ripe berry flavours, smooth tannins and a juicy finish. It's got enough body to fight it out with grilled meats, yet is playful enough to wash down barbecued hamburgers and hotdogs. PRICES REFLECT THE RANGE ACROSS THE COUNTRY. Only the best for Mom: Twice Baked Whitebait Souffles

THE FREE RANGE COOK
Annabel Langbein
gustotv.com

1. Preheat oven to 180 C. Generously butter six 1 cup ramekins and put in fridge to chill.

2. In a medium saucepan, melt the butter until sizzling but not browned. Stir in the flour and cook, stirring, for about 2 minutes until the mixture forms a smooth paste. Whisk in the milk, nutmeg, salt and pepper and lemon zest and bring back to a boil, stirring constantly, until the sauce thickens.

3. Add lemon juice and whisk until smooth. Remove from heat and beat in egg yolks one at a time. Taste for seasoning — it should taste highly seasoned. Fold through whitebait or smoked salmon and herbs.

4. Place egg whites in a clean, dry bowl and beat until they form soft peaks. Add one quarter of the egg whites to the whitebait mixture and stir until well mixed. Then fold the remaining egg whites gently through the mixture.

5. Fill the buttered ramekins to the top, then run your thumb around the inside edge of the dishes so the soufflés puff evenly. Set the ramekins in a deep roasting dish and pour boiling water around them until it comes about halfway up the sides of the dishes. This water bath will help the soufflés cook evenly. Bake until they are lightly puffed, browned and just set in the centre – about 15-20 minutes. (The soufflés can be cooked right through at this point if you prefer. Cook for about 20-25 minutes total.)

6. Remove soufflés from oven and the water bath and leave to cool. They can be covered and refrigerated for up to 2 days. When you are ready to serve them, preheat oven to 220 C. Pour 1 tbsp of cream over each soufflé. Place on a tray and cook until they are risen, crusty and golden — about 12 minutes from refrigerated. WATCH THE ANNABEL LANGBEIN FREE RANGE COOK MONDAY TO THURSDAY AT 5:30 P.M. Haim

Date: May 15
Location: Kool Haus

When indie super-darlings and sisters Este "Bassface" Arielle, Danielle Sari, and Alana Mychal Haim hit the stage, they transform their studio album sessions (featuring a cohesive and seemingly effortless blend of retro soft rock glow, '90s girl-group, and pop) into a genuine rock 'n' roll show for the masses. Just make sure you're pronouncing their name right when you're singing along. (Hint: it rhymes with 'time,' not Cory Haim.)

Game of Thrones

Date: May 14-18
Location: TIFF Bell Lightbox

Game of Thrones is coming to Toronto. No, this doesn't mean Khaleesi and her dragons have found out about you, it means that nearly 100 original artifacts, costumes, weaponry, storyboards and more from seasons 1, 2, and 3, as well as select pieces from the fourth season of George R.R. Martin and HBO's fantasy world, will be on display at the Bell Lightbox. This is likely your one and only shot to sit on the Iron Throne. Just watch out for Jamie.

Mother's Day

Date: May 11
Location: Probably where you grew up

If you're finding this out here for the first time, you're in a lot of trouble. You should have already booked brunch, bought a present, and ordered flowers. Call it a Hallmark holiday all you want, but we're talking about the woman who carried you around for nine months and then raised you for another 18 years. Who are we kidding?! She's still raising you. All you have to do is give her one good day a year — it's a pretty great deal, really.

Avicii

Date: May 17
Location: Rogers Centre

A couple of Grammy Awards, several international No. 1 hits, a ranking of number three on DJ Magazine's Top 100 DJ's ranking, and more than 14-million Facebook fans doesn't seem too bad for a 25-year-old Swedish kid named Tim. Of course, selling out the Rogers Centre is no small feat, either. In town to promote his album, True, this is the kind of show you want to go to if your idea of a good party involves at least 50,000 other people.

Wolf of Wall Street

Date: May 15
Location: Toronto Congress Centre

The real Wolf of Wall Street, Jordan Belfort, will be in town next week to teach you Exactly How To Ethically Persuade Anyone. He'll tell you all about how to achieve his kind of success without straying into his kind of failure.

Toronto Taste

Date: June 8
Location: Corus Quay, 25 Dockside Dr.

Not to be confused with Taste of Toronto (that's not until July), Toronto Taste brings together more than 50 of Toronto's best chefs in a culinary celebration in support of Second Harvest, a local charitable foundation that rescues fresh, healthy surplus food and delivers it to hungry people in need across Toronto. So basically you eat well, and as a result those in need get to as well. The phrase you're looking for here is win-win.

Maple Leafs stand by their head coach

NHL. Buds sign Carlyle to a two-year extension

Maple Leafs head coach Randy Carlyle speaks to reporters during his year-end address at the Air Canada Centre on April 15. Carlyle is getting another chance with the Maple Leafs despite a late-season collapse that caused them to miss the playoffs. DARREN CALABRESE/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Despite a stunning late-season collapse that cost the Toronto Maple Leafs a playoff spot, general manager Dave Nonis believes Randy Carlyle is still the right man to lead the club.

The Maple Leafs handed their embattled head coach a two-year contract extension on Thursday, while at the same time announcing that assistants Dave Farrish, Greg Cronin and Scott Gordon will not be back.

"It was important for us to make it clear that Randy has the support needed to move forward," Nonis said on a conference call. "He has done a lot of good things for us and we expect him to continue that with some new assistants."

There had been rampant speculation that Carlyle would pay with his job after a disastrous end to the most recent campaign saw Toronto tumble out of post-season contention thanks to an embarrassing 2-12-0 finish.

Instead, Nonis and new Maple Leafs president Brendan Shanahan gassed Carlyle's staff in hopes that some new voices can help the 58-year-old get the most out of Toronto's underachieving roster.

"If you've seen it being done before with most of the same players, or a lot of the same players, and with that coach leading that group, I know it can happen," said Nonis. "I know it has happened with this group before. I know that (Carlyle) has reached them before, reached them at times this year.

"For me it's not that we're guessing whether or not he can have success or he can get through to them. We've seen it. I know that it's there and we feel he is the guy that can get through to this group."

Carlyle — who led the Maple Leafs to their first playoff appearance since 2004 in the lockout-shortened 2012-13 season — had Toronto sitting second in the Atlantic Division this year before the wheels fell off in mid-March.

"We feel that this group can continue to grow into a higher level of a hockey club," said Carlyle. "We just have to find and continue to push for a little bit more from the individuals and we are going to do everything we possibly can to change some of the things that are happening with our group." NFL draft

Clowney chosen No. 1 by Texans

No surprise: Clowney is the Texans' man.

After two extra weeks of intrigue, Houston opened the NFL draft Thursday night by taking South Carolina defensive end Jadeveon Clowney.

The St. Louis Rams took tackle Greg Robinson with the second pick, while Blake Bortles was selected by the Jacksonville Jaguars at No. 3.

The Buffalo Bills selected Clemson wide receiver Sammy Watkins with the fourth pick after trading up from the ninth spot with the Cleveland Browns. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sterling's wife won't agree to forced sale: Lawyer

The estranged wife of Los Angeles Clippers owner Donald Sterling will fight to retain her 50 per cent ownership stake in the team, her lawyer said Thursday, adding an unwanted twist to the NBA's plan to force new ownership on the franchise.

Shelly Sterling's attorney, Pierce O'Donnell, said his client "will not agree to a forced or involuntary seizure of her interest.

"As her lawyers we will fight vigorously to defend her property rights," he said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MLS. Doneil Henry's confidence is boosted by training stint with England club West Ham

Ask Toronto FC manager Ryan Nelsen about how far defender Doneil Henry can go in the game and he doesn't hesitate.

"He'll go to the top," said Nelsen, a former centre back of some renown himself. "I had to buy (West Ham manager) Sam Allardyce a couple of bottles of red just to get him back, to tell you the truth."

Allardyce, who managed Nelsen at Blackburn Rovers, saw that firsthand in the off-season when Toronto FC sent the 21-year-old Henry to London to train with the Premier League team.

It speaks volumes about Henry — and the unwavering support of his Toronto FC boss — that Nelsen offered the glowing endorsement three days after a pair of missteps by Henry led to two goals in a 2-1 loss to the New England Revolution.

Doneil Henry GETTY IMAGES

While some only see mistakes, others see Henry as a future captain for both club and country.

The six-foot Henry is an athletic specimen. He has power and pace, able to step up quickly to intercept the ball and blunt attacks.

Henry became the first player from the Toronto FC Academy to graduate to the first team when he signed a pro contract in August 2010. Just 17, Henry had already made three appearances for the senior side.

He has 11 caps for Canada, including 10 starts. Plus 53 league appearances for Toronto.

That experience, along with the training stint in England, has boosted Henry's confidence on and off the field.

"Mentally I think I'm in a strong place," he said.

"I'm no longer going to use experience as a factor," he added. "I'm ready."

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
You may think you know what motivates someone but the planets warn you have it wrong, and that could be dangerous. In your personal life and at work you are advised not to jump to conclusions today — or any day.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You may believe that if you don't act soon your big chance will pass but it isn't true. The sense of urgency you feel is an illusion and what happens over the next three days will prove it.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
You know there is a flaw in your plans but you are tempted to ignore it. If you push ahead regardless, you are sure to regret it. Work out where it is you have gone wrong first.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
What you hear today may annoy you but is it worth getting worked up about? If you allow yourself to get angry over what others say, they will have succeeded in their aim.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Make sure you do not commit yourself to anything you cannot back out of later. Most times your instincts can be trusted but this may be the one time when they let you down.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Don't change anything for the sake of it today because you will only have to change it back again later. It might be better to stick with what you know about, even if it is not what you want. Wait and see what the weekend brings.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You should expect some deception over the next 24 hours, even from people you think you can trust. Don't hold grudges against people who let you down. It happens.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
It does not matter how convinced you may be that you are in the right and others are in the wrong. You won't get far if you insist they come round to your way of thinking. Look for a compromise solution.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You will be caught off by something you did not expect today. You have taken certain things for granted when you had no reason to do so. Admit you made a mistake and do what you can to put it right.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Do what you can to bring people together today but if it proves too tough a task just back off and let them fight it out. Do not get involved on a personal level yourself. If you choose sides you'll be the loser.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Make sure you have all the facts because it is the only way you can be certain you are not being deceived. The planets warn that unscrupulous people won't hesitate to cheat you.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Current cosmic activity endows you with self-confidence but the downside is you might start thinking you cannot fail. Apply common sense to everything you do today. SALLY BROMPTON
